What's New in the Winsplit?

Amsplit takes a task that most splitting utilities neglect: creating splits based on the contents of a file. The program automatically creates a list of all text objects found in the input file and then applies different splitting modes according to their content. In particular, it breaks the text into paragraphs, provides the capability to separate sentences from paragraphs, and also allows you to split files by size, the character set, or the language. The application's interface does not require any special skills to use it. The user interface is made up of only a few simple fields: the input file and a button for splitting the file into pieces, saving them to various locations, or joining several files into a single file. Winsplit lets you take full advantage of drag-and-drop functions in order to perform the desired tasks (this also works with archives). By default, the program saves splits in a folder named "Results". You can modify this folder by using the output location setting. In addition, you may edit the configuration settings using a shortcut menu. Among them, you will find parameters for splitting by size, character set, or language.
