The Self-Efficacy for Managing Pain Scale (SEMPS) is designed to assess the patient's belief in his/her capacity to control pain. This scale has been widely used in several languages in Western countries, but has not yet been translated into Chinese and evaluated. This study therefore aimed to develop and evaluate the psychometric properties of the SEMPS-Chinese version (SEMPS-C). A cross-sectional study was conducted in a pain clinic of a tertiary hospital in Beijing, China. A total of 307 patients with chronic pain participated in the study. The SEMPS-C was the primary outcome measure. Exploratory factor analysis and confirmatory factor analysis were performed to explore the underlying structure of the SEMPS-C. The internal consistency, convergent validity, and discriminant validity of the SEMPS-C were analyzed. Confirmatory factor analysis confirmed that the SEMPS-C contains only two factors: "confidence in the ability to control pain" and "confidence in the ability to cope with pain". The internal consistency of the SEMPS-C was satisfactory (Cronbach's  $\alpha$ : 0.858). The SEMPS-C was significantly positively correlated with pain severity, the pain catastrophizing scale, and the visual analogue scale of anxiety for pain. The SEMPS-C was able to differentiate patients with and without pain on the anxiety for pain visual analogue scale. The SEMPS-C was reliable and valid in China, showing evidence of value in terms of assessing patients' confidence in their ability to control pain and cope with pain. The findings have important implications for the clinical management of chronic pain in China.

But, contrary to the Commonwealth's assertion, a conviction under section 9701(a)(2)(ii) is not established merely by proof of possession of a firearm. As noted above, a conviction under the statute required proof that the firearm was possessed "while knowing that it had been stolen." 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 9701(a)(2)(ii). Bennett's conviction for theft required proof that she, with intent to deprive the owner of property, unlawfully took or exercised control over the property. See id. § 3921(a). Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the Commonwealth as verdict winner, we conclude that there was sufficient evidence to establish that a necessary element of Bennett's conviction, possession of the stolen firearm, could not have been established absent her possession of a firearm. See Commonwealth v. Jones, 574 Pa. 39, 572 A.2d 121, 124 (1990). Accordingly, we conclude that the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction for the theft offense. 7
