There is a lot of details to go. The Internet is a rapidly growing global network of computers and computer networks arranged to allow the easy and robust exchange of information between users of computers. Hundreds of millions of people around the world have access to computers connected to the Internet via Internet Service Providers (ISPs). Content providers place multimedia information, i.e. advertisements, educational information, music, and images, on web pages. Advertisements, for example, are often placed in rotation or sequentially. When a user turns his/her browser to a requested web page, an advertisement may appear that is relevant to the requested web page. Advertisements, along with the web pages that they link to, are often presented to users in the form of a HyperText Markup Language (HTML) document. The presentation of advertisements in HTML documents allows for the descriptive and explicit inclusion of information. In a HTML document, for example, a relevant advertisement may be identified by an HTML attribute associated with the advertisement, such as a tag of the form: ##STR1# where, in the above example, the tag is "class="advertisement"". In practice, the phrase "advertisement" is a term of art that refers to an HTML tag or tag attributes that are used to identify advertisements. Other HTML tags, for example, PHILIPPINE.AUCTION.SALE, may be used to identify the sale of an object that is being auctioned. The inclusion of such tags enables a content provider to identify the nature of the information more explicitly. To view a web page, a user communicates a request for the web page to the ISP. The request includes the domain name of the web page, i.e. the web address of the web page. The request also includes identification of the user, such as an IP address of the user. The ISP locates the web page using a domain name server and establishes a connection to the web server that hosts the web page. The web server replies to the request with the desired web page. The web page is typically downloaded from the web server to the user's computer, and the user may view the web page using a suitable application, such as a web browser. Advertisements may also be embedded in the HTML documents that are presented to a user. In this way, the advertisements included within the web page may be more appropriately targeted to the user. The web browser can identify the advertisements embedded in a web page, and typically presents them to the user, for example,
