The Stewart & Stella show at the Orpheum Theater This story begins at the Orpheum Theater on October 2, 1946. It was a small silent movie house, near the corner of 18th and Main streets, that was run by a guy named Stewart. The theater was called the Orpheum because it was shaped like a barrel. The Orpheum became a world-famous theater for showing the silent movie era, and for hosting the vaudeville acts of Will Rogers. The Orpheum was built in 1891, and many have said it was the world's oldest continually operating movie theater. It was eventually torn down in the early 1950s to make way for the Century 21 department store. Other rumors suggest that it was destroyed in a small paper warehouse fire, but I have never found anything to back up that particular story. While there is no concrete answer, I think that if the Orpheum has never burned down, it is still operating. So, imagine my surprise when I walk into the theater today to see that it is still in operation! This is the Orpheum, taken in 1981. October 2, 1946: The Stewart & Stella Show It was a Monday night in September, 1946. The theater was showing a double feature, a silent movie and a talkie. During the silent movies, the theater was rather quiet, other than the hollow, thundering sound of

Use Docx to RTF Converter, an all-in-one solution to convert Word DOC, DOCX, DOCM, RTF and other DOCX files to RTF format. With easy, fast and... What should be and shouldn't be, the tools you may download, the best utilities you can get, which new apps are absolutely safe and which to avoid: your decision. Life is a lot easier with these hints. The list is divided into two groups, Windows and Linux. The "Unanswered and Vulnerable" filters the first group. Life is simpler with those answers; you either know the correct or you do not. For the "Unanswered and Vulnerable" list, it's explained at the end, but here are some of the other terms we've noticed: UAC stands for User Account Control and it is a security feature that we know and love. Anti-virus can be something that other users install, either built into a piece of software or a new application. Don't use one, you only mess it up and don't really need one. Add-on isn't really a feature, just a bug. As things change, so do the versions and the behavior. Programming is the activity that gets the job done, but all programs aren't equal. Some can be dangerous, more than just a drag on a computer. Lock-down is a control that allows you to limit access to a computer. This is a browser-based activity that would be covered under the heading of anti-virus, so we don't worry about it. Packed programs are installed from a file. They are usually but not always straight from a company and their interests are usually obvious. They are so small, that they can't really cause much damage, but they do provide some bad ideas that are being re-presented to you. Safari is a browser. Don't use it. Repair is different from fix. You can do repairs, but you can't really do fixes. You have to find the problem and deal with it. Setup is a way to build a new PC. Everyone likes a clean PC, and most of us have one, so this is great. Tinker is the player for kids. Don't get one of those, just stick with Windows. Update is the act of installing software for the sake of having an
