“With this in mind, we’re constantly working on ways to optimize the way the player moves in each situation – whether it’s on the pitch or in the broadcast booth,” said producer Sean O’Driscoll. “We set out to create a more realistic experience for football players, so Fifa 22 Full Crack was the perfect opportunity to showcase this technology and show fans what it can do in the game.” When looked at through a microscope, the vignette actually looks a lot like the way humans play a game of football.

Above and below the center screen (where the ball is displayed), the movement of the players is demonstrated as they perform various actions. The challenges to this technology are in the ways that the data is collected; players have to wear special suits and sensors in order to capture their movements, and developers have to decide how to use the data. Players can be sprinting forward, but the way they fly from a standing start after they sprint is realistic in the game. Sprinting speeds vary and in game the speed can vary depending on a player’s build and running style. We can expect to see the range of speeds during a match, and it’s still easy to move in. When the player tackles another player the impact of the tackle can be very difficult to convey. The way the player is brought down and the impact of the collision can vary depending on the defender’s build and style.

The impact on player simulation is also very real. It’s unclear how the collection of motion capture data will be used in the game; the technology can track the motion of the player by a stationary lens or camera (still footage) in a stadium, or a stationary camera on a person. It could theoretically be used to track the player’s motion and change the player’s speed dynamically, but I’m unsure how this would be implemented in-game. In addition to the total effect of all players on the outcome of a play, the outcome will also be influenced by the attributes of the ball, the referee, the opponent and his abilities, the players abilities and the defenders positioning. What's new in Fifa 22:

- New Journey Features - Journey mode in FIFA 21 has been expanded and now includes an “Exploration” level. This level allows players to venture out into the world, trade items, and uncover new tales across FIFA’s many game modes and Ultimate Team.
- New Transfer Equations - There are added advantages to buying cheap and selling expensive. You might go from looking like a power forward to a goal scoring midfielder in a single week, and the reversion of value is much greater when you make a move.
- New Pass Control Intelligence - Playing the ball back to a team-mate is no longer always the best option, especially when close to the goal. To make the game smarter, the decision-making of passing the ball back is now context-sensitive, making it even more tactical.
- New Attacking Intelligence - Now attacking attacks occur more naturally. What started with a simple goal move, quickly grew into an attacking move with multiple options, instead of just three or five moves. Players now actually look to pass the ball to a team-mate to create openings.
- New Attacking Intelligence - During an attacking move, the player will now also now intelligently decide which pass is the best option to run towards.
- New Goalkeeper Intelligence - Now reacting to the situation like a true professional, the goalie will perform his best in specific contexts. His reactions to specific scenarios are much smarter, and now he will always perform the most in-depth actions in certain situations.
- New Ball Control Intelligence - You can now make passes in a smarter and quicker way to teams, removing those complicated controls that could be a turn-off for many players.
- New Ball Control Intelligence - When controlling the ball with a right touch, players are now more naturally inclined to change direction.
- New Defence Intelligence - Defending players change their position much more intelligently than before. They position themselves much quicker and perform much more diverse actions in short bursts to dynamically disrupt the flow of the attack.

- New Penalty System -penalties are now contextual, so the play-maker can deliberately place the ball in the perfect area, or expect a penalty that allows for a game-changing penalty.
- New Away Kit Design - The away kit design for clubs with imaginary sponsors is now much more dynamic
